Description

Introductory description

This module will extend your knowledge of the subject of philosophy, and develop your understanding of philosophy's role within education. You will critically examine arguments about the methods and purposes of philosophy, and broader traditions of philosophical thought. This will enable you to think critically and reflectively about the educational value of philosophy and the centrality of education to the practice of philosophy more broadly. The module is interdisciplinary, and it includes both theoretical and practical components. It explores the way an understanding of philosophical debates can help address complex problems in education, teaching and learning. You will also have the opportunity to design, run and reflect on your own practical teaching activity on this module. This will enable you to develop teaching skills, and skills in communicating philosophical ideas to non-specialist and wider audiences.

Module aims

1. To critically investigate different methods of enquiry used in philosophy, and different traditions in philosophical thinking.
2. To critically analyse contemporary approaches to philosophy in schools and consider alternatives.
3. To explore how practical issues and insights in education can shed new light on philosophical concepts and debates.

4. To examine how an understanding of philosophical assumptions about thinking, learning and teaching can assist in teaching subjects
5. To examine how an understanding of the philosophical assumptions behind school curricula can assist and enhance pupil learning.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

1. The relationship between education and philosophy
2. The nature of philosophical thinking
3. Philosophical methods
4. 'Analytic' and 'continental' approaches to philosophy
5. The role of experience, imagination and creativity in philosophy
6. Philosophy's relationship to art and literature
7. Philosophy in schools and the educational value of philosophy

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Demonstrate systematic, critical and coherent understanding of established and state-of-the-art conceptions of philosophy and philosophical thinking, including detailed knowledge of their underlying assumptions
- Effectively communicate philosophical ideas to specialist and non-specialist audiences, using established and state of the art disciplinary, and interdisciplinary, techniques.
- Deploy a range of established methods and techniques to review, consolidate and critically analyse literature, extend arguments, and create and examples and illustrations
- Show initiative in applying theoretical and conceptual arguments to practical educational problems and issues, in a way that takes into account complex and unpredictable educational contexts
- Show initiative in applying practical issues and insights to the critique of, and extension of, theoretical and conceptual arguments.
